The Effortless Paloma (aka Your New Spring Go-To)

There's something about a Paloma that just signals spring has arrived. It's light, refreshing, a little citrusy, and perfectly balanced—the kind of drink you make once and suddenly it becomes your signature.

Even better? It's incredibly simple. No fuss, no complicated steps—just a beautiful mix of tequila, bright grapefruit, and a squeeze of fresh lime that comes together in minutes

- TEQUILA (BLANCO IS FRESH AND CRISP)
- GRAPEFRUIT JUICE OR GRAPEFRUIT SODA
- FRESH LIME JUICE
- A PINCH OF SALT (OPTIONAL, BUT HIGHLY RECOMMENDED)
- ICE + A GRAPEFRUIT OR LIME WEDGE FOR GARNISH

How to make it:

Start with a salt-rimmed glass if you're feeling a little extra (and honestly, you should). Fill your glass with ice, pour in the tequila and fresh lime juice, then top with grapefruit soda or juice and a splash of sparkling water. Give it a gentle stir, garnish, and you're done.

Authentik Tip

Set up a little DIY Paloma bar for your next get-together—grapefruit slices, pretty glassware, and a bowl of salt for the rims. It's interactive, effortless, and instantly elevates the experience.

Spring Reset

8 Mindful ways to refresh your space

Open a Window First

Before anything else, let the air in. Five minutes of fresh breeze clears stagnant energy and tells your nervous system something new is here.

Swap One Heavy Textile

One dark throw, one heavy pillow. Replace it with something light .. linen, cotton, a soft blush or butter yellow. Your body feels the shift before your eyes do.

Bring in Something Living

A stem from the garden. A pot of herbs. A grocery store bunch of tulips. Living things remind us that growth is always possible and they quietly purify the air while they're at it.

Clear One Surface Completely

Pick one a nightstand, a counter, a coffee table. Clear it, wipe it down, and only return what truly belongs. Negative space isn't emptiness. It's room to breathe.

Follow the Light

Walk your home at a different time of day and notice where sunlight falls. Move a chair, a reading nook, your morning coffee spot toward it. Chasing light is an underrated form of self-care.

Scent with Intention

Swap heavy winter fragrances for something citrus, herbal, or floral. Simmer lemon and rosemary on the stove. Light a green tea or jasmine candle. Scent is the fastest path to a mood shift.

Do a Gratitude Edit

Walk slowly through your space and notice three things you genuinely love.

Appreciating what's already there shifts the energy of a room — without spending a dollar.

End with Softness Fluff the pillows. Fold the throw. Straighten the books. These aren't chores — they're small acts of care. A home that feels tended to will always feel like a sanctuary.

A reset doesn't have to be dramatic. Slow down, pay attention, and let your home remind you — you deserve a space that feels good.

Color Crush

Peachy Pink & Golden Yellow

This spring, I'm loving the soft glow of peachy pink paired with golden yellow..it's warm, happy, and just the right mix of playful and refined. Think sunlit mornings and golden hour wrapped into a palette that instantly lifts a space.

Peachy pink reads almost like a neutral, adding warmth without feeling heavy.

Layer in golden yellow, and suddenly everything feels brighter and more alive, like a little burst of sunshine woven throughout the room.

What makes this combo so good? It's versatile. It can feel artistic and collected or calm and elevated depending on how you use it.

Try it in a bold piece of art, a painted moment, or even just a few accessories. It's an easy way to bring in color that feels fresh, inviting, and effortlessly chic.
